Brown's Hotel London

"Sophisticated & Luxurious"

A luxurious hotel right in the heart of Mayfair, Brown's was built in 1837 after James Brown, the valet of poet Lord Byron, noticed the lack of top-quality hotels in London. Its most distinguished feature is the Georgian façade, and the sumptuous interior is reminiscent of an English country manor house. Brown's was one of Agatha Christie's favorite haunts, a place where she liked to observe the eccentricities of life so intrinsic to the plots of her many whodunits. Rooms feature feather duvets and large beds. Choose from standard rooms to several choices in luxurious suites.

The Connaught

"Mayfair's Best-Kept Secret"

The Connaught has preserved its air of Edwardian beauty to create a feeling akin to staying in a palatial country house. Decorated with hand-tufted carpets and fine antiques, this is a hotel steeped in elegance, but one that effortlessly incorporates all the trappings of the modern world. The mahogany staircase, original oil paintings, and hand-made furniture blend effortlessly alongside the new fitness studio. All the rooms have been individually decorated in an English country style. The Connaught's premier attraction, however, remains its Michelin-starred restaurant.

Four Seasons Hotel London at Park Lane

"Season's Best"

Mayfair is full of luxuriously opulent accommodations, and they can't get any more luxurious than the Four Seasons. The most basic of suites comes equipped with a parlor and bedroom (separated by French doors), palm trees, fresh flowers, champagne on ice, decorated in an elegant but homely fashion. Alternatively, if you really want to splash out, take one of the special suites, such as the Mayfair suite, which is decorated with antiques and original artwork and features a marble hallway and a conservatory leading to the second floor terrace overlooking Hamilton Palace.
